Pierce Pettis

"Pierce Pettis doesn't write mere songs,
he writes literature. . .
End to end the songwriting is brilliant . . .
Pierce Pettis albums are events in my listening.
His writing just gets better all the time and his singing is marvelous, wry and warm..."

~ Sing Out! Magazine

After a lifetime of crafting finely-wrought, heart-touching songs, singer-songwriter Pierce Pettis feels that he's finally found his comfort zone. "The biggest change," he says of this point in his career "has been getting over myself and realizing this is a job and a craft. And the purpose is not fame and fortune (whatever that is) but simply doing good work."

"From the time I was very little, I always had the music going in my head," Pettis explains. "Like my own personal soundtrack or something. I also come from a fairly musical family: my mother went to music school and was an excellent organist and pianist. And my sisters all played piano and other instruments. In school, I met other kids who wanted to be rock stars, just like me. From the time we were around 10 or so up through high school, we put together various bands — all of them horrible."

But his 'horrible' bands didn't deter him. Even though he had a nagging feeling ("I thought I was supposed to be a doctor or something.") he persevered — not only playing music but writing songs in a mix of rock, folk, country and R&B genres that landed him an unpaid position as a staff writer for Muscle Shoals Sounds Studios. While there, his track "Song at the End of the Movie" found its way to Joan Baez's 1979 album Honest Lullaby. Pierce Pettis' songs have been recorded by artists ranging from Garth Brooks and Dion to Joan Baez and Art Garfunkel. He is currently working on a new solo project for Compass Records Group, due for release in 2018. [See more at <http://www.piercepettis.com/>.]
